The Social Life

Is of great importance to the student. Student life is not complete without it. During the college year numerous socials and "parties" are given. We have planned for these and are able to furnish refreshments in an up-to-date and pleasing manner. Besides this, we are prepared to satisfy your desires with first-class Confectionery, Fruits, Nuts, etc. Give us a call.

Junior Class History.

Time flies. The Junior class has known this for a long time. But to realize that time flies swiftly, we have only to look back over the last six years during which the class has existed as such. In the fall of the year 1903 there were twenty-seven students enrolled in the second year Academy class, three of whom are now members of the class of '10. In 1904, there were twenty-five enrolled in the class, twelve of whom were graduated from the Academy at the end of the spring term. There were eight members in the Freshman class the next year. Few classes have the privilege of being Freshmen two years, but such is the record of the class of '10. Owing to a change in the college curriculum which advanced the courses one year, our class was again the Freshman class. Nothing is harder to do gracefully than to be a Freshman, but at the end of our second year, we felt more at home in our places. We will not tire you with an account of our deeds,—which were really great—as is the custom in class histories, but we will proceed to give an account of the individual members of the class. Suffice it to say that one member of our class in 1907, Miss Katherine Romig, won the state contest; that we have had our full share of positions in student activities and on athletic teams; and that we, having become tired of the class colors crimson and white, which are so common, now float a flag of maroon and black. But now for the five units which compose the class of 1910.

Roy O. Fitch, the phenomenal student of the Junior class, Latin and Greek he devours with a zest seldom equaled. Chemistry he took by storm. But his greatest interest at present is in Botany and Physics, since he is at present assistant laboratory instructor in those branches. Roy's achievements in debate are noteworthy. In 1908 he was leader of the team, and worked like a man to win. That he didn't win, was not his fault. This year, Roy was again on the debating team, and for a term of three months lived on nothing but Ship Subsidy. Roy is also an orator of no small ability, having represented the Junior class in the local contest two years. The above named person has made no small reputation as an exponent of the theory of Evolution. If asked why he believes in the evolution of man, he will tell you that the fact was forced upon him by his surroundings at Pacific College. Anarchy, he considers a deadly foe. Fitch is no lady-killer, yet he recognizes the beauty of (a certain) woman. He lives at Sherwood, Oregon and is said to be of excellent character even by those who know him best. He is a native of Sherwood. His future is as yet uncertain.

Harvey A. Wright we would fain leave to some literary genius to describe. To give his speciality would be impossible, and to give a list of his accomplishments would be an endless task. Indiana has produced few such men. Yet it took Oregon to serve as an adequate field for his genius. Harvey is a man of excellent character, ex-president of Y. M. C. A., editor-in-chief of the Crescent, basketball manager during the past two years, and since his advent at Newberg he has done successful pastoral work in the churches at Rex, Springbrook, and Sherwood. He is an excellent student, showing a tendency toward the classics.

Harvey is musically inclined, and although not accomplished, is talented. His favorite song is "Auld Lang Syne." His athletic abilities are marked. His achievements in basketball are highest, and in tennis he is one of our best men. Harvey's amatory relations would be of interest to our readers, were they not too long to report, and could they be known, but at present we are denied that privilege. Harvey is very temperate in his habits. His future is as yet uncertain, but very hopeful.

Laura E. Hammer is at once the Queen of the Junior class. We find that, while she is our only lady member, she does the work of many, and would be queen among a hundred. As a student, Laura is of high standing. She has a record of fifteen minutes in time required to get a French or Greek lesson, and her work in class is very satisfactory. Miss Hammer plays on the girls' basketball team, and no match game has been won by our boy's team unless Laura were in the grand stand to cheer on the players. One of the lessons she has learned while in college is that one's value is not determined by their class standing. One may be a hero and not be a Junior. Laura ranks high as a musician. Her excellent alto voice has won for her a place in the chapel choir which we think would be ill-filled by any one else. Laura plays the piano well. Her favorite piece is "Mississippi Rag."

Laura is president of Y. W. C. A. and an active figure in all of the college activities. We can not tell certainly what she will do when she gets through school, but she has stated that she does not intend to teach school, after the manner of her sisters and mother.

Leonard C. George is one of our members, who has been with us from the beginning. When others faint by the way, Leonard is still up and going. Science is his lot. English has no especial attraction for him, while German and French he considers an abomination. But in the realms of chemistry, physics, and biology he feels more at home. It is said that on consulting the Springbrook Oracle in the days of his youth, he was informed that in future years he would carry a medicine case, and cure the ills of many thousands.

Leonard's fame at present centers about his work as an artist. Many of the excellent posters on the bulletin board testify to his skill with the pen and brush. George is an active member of the Y. M. C. A., and chairman of the religions meetings committee. Any time after 1915 you may have Leonard's professional services as physician.

Concerning the author himself, little need (or could) be said. As a student his main accomplishment has been in making people believe that he knew something when he did not. Mathematics have always been abhorred by him. Latin, German, French and English have proved fascinating, while psychology and philosophy have been very highly prized. Indeed the author has been called a philosopher without an idea. Wouldn't it be better to say a philosopher without a correct idea? He is an admirer of things musical, and yet not a musician, an enthusiast over athletics, but not an athlete. His future is yet before him.

RUSSELL LEWIS.

P. S. You may believe or you may be tempted to doubt the ability and the characteristics of the individuals spoken of by the writer of the above article, but you will notice that he himself is very modest and modesty is a more valuable trait of character than any which are attributed to the other members of the Junior class. ED.

A Few of Oregon's Useful Birds.

The barn owls are shot whenever a chance occurs which is a shame as its name should be on the laws protected list. It depends upon a diet of moles, gophers, rats and mice. They are more useful to rid the premises of these pests than cats, and they are the only bird or animal that I know of that will catch and eat moles.

When a child I delighted to go to my grandfather's for there was a small owl that used to stay in and around his barn. Many a time I have seen it seated on the gatepost, clothesline, fence, or some part of the barn. How wise it looked. I delighted to watch its movements after sunset, but at one of my visits the owl was missing. It was supposed that some hunter had killed it.

There are many kinds of woodpeckers, the Lewis, Redbreasted Sapsucker, Pilate Bowney, Harris, etc. They never sing, but the rapping on the roof or trees will testify that they keep good time. We see the woodpecker about the farm on all kinds of trees searching for insects.—They retire to the tall isolated stubs of the forest to prepare for housekeeping. Both birds help in digging out this nest; while one rests and watches the other works. They carefully chip away the inner surface to give it a smooth finish. The circular entrance to the nest is merely large enough to admit the bird, then it turns downward and enlarges into the shape of a large pear. The white eggs are laid on the chips at the bottom of the nest.

The nut-hatch, to most eyes, is only a black and white woodpecker, but as a destroyer of insects injurious to trees, no sort of woodpecker is half as useful in the groves, orchards and nurseries as the nut-hatch and his tiny cousin the "chickadee" or black tit-mouse.

The phoebe is modest in appearance, clothed in somber colors, but always seems very cheerful. They build their nests near houses and such places as under bridges. The farmer recognizes their usefulness and always has a good word for them. They become greatly attached to localities, returning year after year to their old roosting places and nesting sites. These birds consume a large number of insects every day.

Parkman's wren is a very common resident, coming about the second week of April. This specie usually nests in and around houses. We find them nesting in many places such as in hollow trees or logs and in bird boxes, but the place most envied is under a porch or just over a doorway. This wren is greatly respected by the horticulturist and bee keeper, as he destroys many insects each day that would be very injurious to the bees and orchards. The wren lays about seven eggs, color white, dotted with brown. They raise two broods in a season.

Farmers and horticulturists, who lose patience with the robins because they will steal fruit from them, can hardly afford to kill these birds. A young growing robin will require more than his weight of animal food every day. He is always busy gathering such a variety of insects and worms.

One of the most striking birds we have in this country is the meadow lark. As he stands erect, opens his mouth, he seems to put his whole soul into his song. He repeats it over and over again, though every hearer is delighted as if he was telling of some great victory accomplished.

Birds have a practical bearing upon many of most valuable and extensive occupations of man. How many mistakes have been made for want of proper observation of the habits of birds. Many a bird has been killed because he picked up a few grains or eaten a small quantity of fruit which was only a small portion of his food. I shall welcome the day when the people shall do all in their power to further the protection of the harmless and useful birds of Oregon.

From an Oregonian of class '10.

Happy Childhood.

The sun rose warm and cheerful and looked about on the trees and hills in its wise and knowing way as if to say: "It is time to be moving. I have come to make you grow."

I was up bright and early, too, for this was the eventful day of the year when the world looks most beautiful, when the summer breeze blows sweetest, for I was four years old. The mountains were a buzz and hum of fun-seekers and those who for a few days had left the busy life of the shop and office to wander over the hills and through the valleys and woods by the cool inviting brook.

Fishing was excellent, and the mountain streams abound with shining trout awaiting the hook. And then there was the bonfire on the beach, and the delicious repast of fish and sandwiches.

This day, the twenty-fifth of August, 1903, was to be no exception to the joyous times. I had planned the day's expedition with much zeal. A little friend near my own age had been invited to pick flowers with me. It was time for the lilly of the valley, and such beautiful ferns and mosses grew in the woods. At nine o'clock

Mary, for that was my friend's name, arrived, looking bright as a sunbeam with her freshly ironed gingham apron and her hair plaited in shining pig tails. We were off to the woods amid noisy and merry chatter. The quest was to be for the first white lily bowing its pure white head above the ferns. Is there anything more delightful than skipping about in childish glee, and coming upon the dainty flowers trying to hide themselves in their bower of green, and at last to return home, tired but happy, with one's tiny arms laden with the treasures of the woods?

Mary was rather restless on this occasion, and more eager to return home than is usually her want. At last, tired of her teasing, we left the woods and went into the sunshiny meadows again. We rushed into the house to bring to a doting mother the flowers we had so joyously gathered. But at the door, oh! what did I see? a tiny table spread with the daintiest luncheon with a pink and white cake in the center with four candles on it. From the next room there suddenly burst a group of laughing children. Eva and Nellie, Clara and Anna, Dolly and Carrie were there. What a surprise! Was a child ever happier than I at that moment staring amazedly at the clamoring, joyful children?

Mary stood back of me smiling knowingly. What did I say? There was nothing to say. I was almost carried by my friends and made to take a seat at the head of the table, and each gathered about me to offer their greetings and gifts of love. No queen could have been more proud of her golden crown and necklace of pearls than I was of those dolls and handkerchiefs and pin-cushions stitched with care by the girls who gave them. Mother came in and put on the rest of the lunch, and it seemed to me that she was more beautiful than ever before. After lunch there were games in the yard, and at last every happy farewell was said, and all the traces of the birthday dinner were cleared away. But the memory remains still. And the gifts stowed away in the drawer recall to mind the most happy memories of that birthday, never to be forgotten. L. E. H. '10

The Seriousness of Folly.

If a man should deliberately take an axe and cut a finger off, or if he should wish, as did King Midas, that everything he touched might turn to gold, you would say at once he was foolish, and about ready for the insane asylum.

He may be foolish, but don't be hasty in your condemnation; reflect upon your own acts and wishes before you cast a stone at such a man. What is folly but doing things contrary to knowledge or wishing for things harmful. Who is there that has not done this? If you recall your desires of this day you would probably be guilty of folly.

It is surprising that so many of our desires if granted would give us pain and sorrow or be the cause of our downfall, and the dissimilarity between our wishes and our means will always be, I suppose, something of a mystery. This constant wishing for things really harmful constitutes the seriousness of the case, nor is the seriousness in the least abated because we seldom really understand our desires, for the lack of understanding is the cause of the mischief which comes from our aims and desires.

We wish for wealth, forgetting that the love for wealth has ruined morally many a man. We forget that in the intense pursuit for wealth and in keen competition of the business world, many have broken down physically and mentally. We forget that health, honesty and happiness cannot be purchased by any amount of money.

We wish for power. Samson's strength was the cause of his own death. Men in all ages have so ardently wished for authority that they have committed murder to become king, or bought votes to obtain what power is invested in a justice of the peace. Power gained, despotic power which is self-destructive, and gained at the expense of principle and of other men's possessions, character and lives.

Behold Hannibal in his wish for glory. There was not glory enough in Africa nor in Spain but in the laying low of the walls of Rome he had visions of glory. The mountains were crossed, the city of the world empire in sight, but glory evaded him and we see him an exile in a small far away country, begging of its king for food and shelter.

When you wish you could live a long time, do you stop to think that when you become old you will have a wrinkled face, a palsied hand and a feeble step? Your memory serves you well now but then it will play you false. Your opinions and good judgment so much respected now will gain no notice then. Then, too, think of the many sorrows that will be yours because of the death of all your friends. Is it a wise wish?

It is a mistake to think that because our wishes are not gratified they can do no harm. They are the pulses of our soul and what we ardently wish for determines the trend of our actions. Could we only be content with what necessity gives us, the folly of wishing for something we do not really want, if only we knew it, would never be charged against us.

Must we wish? Then let the following lines express our desire.

"Oh Thou, who knowest the wants of human kind,
Vouchsafe me health of body, health of mind;
A soul prepared to meet the frowns of Fate,
And look undaunted on a future state;
That reckons death a blessing, yet can bear
Existence nobly, with its weight of care."

Social Events.

The Juniors entertained the Seniors at a six o'clock dinner, May 7 at the home of Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Elliot. After an excellent four course dinner the company was entertained by listening to the toasts on various shades of College life. Those giving toasts were Eula Hodson '09, Ernest Hadlock '09, Roy Fitch '10 and Harvey Wright '10; Russel Lewis '10 toastmaster.

Pearl Moore entertained the Helianthus and Agoretton Clubs at her home June 4. Everyone enjoyed very much the games and refreshments, the former being as unique as the later was dainty. All declare Pearl a charming hostess.

Maroon and Black! Maroon and Black! Juniors Juniors, Yes by Jack! Who are we! Who! and When! We are nineteen, nineteen-ten.

June 5, the faculty with their wives and husbands were entertained at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Terrell.

Direct all communications to The Crescent, Newberg, Oregon.

In sending forth this issue as a Junior number it is not the purpose of the class to go about it in a "to show you how it's done" spirit, but different members of our class having had much to do with the Crescent, past and present, we have taken the liberty to issue a number in our name. The literary matter previous to and including the editorials is written by members of the class, but the locals, exchanges and the securing of ads is credited to the regular staff, two of which are members of the Junior class.

An editorial in the April number of the Oregon Teachers Monthly deplores the fact that so many of our Oregon teachers have become or are becoming openly addicted to the drink and tobacco habits. This is certainly a deplorable condition and it would be interesting to know in what class of Colleges such teachers have been educated (?), whether in the state schools or in the denominational Colleges. We hazard the guess that the majority of such teachers are not from the denominational Colleges, for such habits are strictly forbidden and the prohibition enforced as well as possible, while it is generally conceded that in the state schools these vices are winked at. The influence of a teacher upon his pupils is so great that an investigation is warranted and the school or schools sending forth such men should be banned.

We are sorry this number did not appear on time, but the printer was so rushed that he could not do the work. The next number will be a Commencement number and will be issued about the 25th.

Fire in the Chapel.

A fire occurred in the chapel May 26, which will not soon be forgotten. It occurred at the chapel period and notwithstanding the fact that the students were all in the room at that time, they conducted themselves in such a commendable manner as to prevent a riot, remaining in their seats while the flames were being extinguished.

A few details may prove of interest. May 25th the students gave an entertainment consisting of a song by Elmer Beeler, two scenes from Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice" and a farce "A perplexing Situation." The students were assisted by Dr. Rayner W. Kelsey, who gave some Riley readings. A large and interested crowd was present and a nice sum realized by the Athletic Association.

For some time a debt has been hanging over the gymnasium, which was nearly all paid earlier in the year. The note signed by the officers of the Association and secured by the personal signatures of a few of the students, was purchased of the bank May 26, with the proceeds of the entertainment and burned in presence of the Student Body. It was a fire which caused more rejoicing than sorrow.

Roy Fitch was on the sick list May 6.

Miss Erma Brown, of Dundee, was a visitor May 5.

Laura Commans visited her sister, Edna, May 22 to 24.

John F. Hanson, of Portland, was chapel speaker May 7.

Miss Irene Lowe visited Elma Paulsen Tuesday, May 20.

Kenneth Hansen spent May 1-3 at his home in Silverton.

Mrs. R. W. Kelsey and Mrs. W. I. Kelsey visited the college May 20.

Mary Cook is staying at Mr. Estles, on account of measles in her home.

Asa Mack quit school May 27. We are sorry to see students dropping off.

Margaret Hammer visited with her brother and sister Thursday, May 27.

Miss Hazel Paulsen visited college with her sister Elma Wednesday, May 26.

An interesting chapel talk was given by Prof. Buchanan of the City school, May 18.

Rev. Weaver of the Friends church is giving a series of chapel talks concerning the Bible.

Mary and Nathan Cook were out of school May 10th on account of the funeral of their aunt.

Olin Hadley spent May 22-24 visiting in Portland with his father who is on the U. S. jury.

Ole: "You'd better write up my trip to Portland, Harvey. I don't know what I did down there."

President Kelsey attended the State Sunday School Convention at Salem and took part in the program.

The surveying class has the campus well pegged. They have also done some real for sure surveying out of town.

Miss Myrtle Hannon, a senior in Willamette University, visited her parents and sister Gladys at the dormitory May 9.

Rayner W. Kelsey gave some chapel readings at the chapel May 20 which were greatly appreciated by all the students.

Prof. Reagan: "I think that snakes, in addition to their poison glands, have salivary glands the same as other people."

Lillian Johnson, who quit school last term in order to teach the Pleasant View school, visited college before going to her home in Heppner, having finished a successful term as school ma'am.

Miss Eula Hodson '09 described the Yosemite Valley in a very interesting manner for us in chapel May 18.

Martin Johnson, a former student, left Newberg for Heppner with his sister Lillian. He has some contract work there.

Some of the green pairs (pears) which are hanging around the maple trees, seem to be getting about ripe as they are very soft.

Miss Lola Rishel, one of Miss Johnson's pupils, visited college May 7. She expects to enter college next year as a preparatory student.

"Wallace A. Newlin, '05, who has been teaching in Pacific College, Oregon, for two years, will attend the University of California next year."—Earlhamite.

The Sociology class had an interesting diversion in getting some data concerning the city of Newberg, each family being canvassed by a member of the class.

Prof. J.—"What kind of eggs are longest in hatching?"

C. Newlin—"Wooden eggs."

The Helianthus girls entertained the Agoreton's in the college gymnasium May 14. After playing informal games a spread was served. Everyone reported a very enjoyable time.

Alumni Notes.

Lena Spangle, '08, visited friends in Newberg May 15 and 16.

Chas. B. Wilson, '97, has been appointed postmaster at Newberg.

Clarence J. Edwards, '93, is building a new business block in Newberg.

Cecil J. Hoskins, '07 and Paul V. Maris, '07, visited friends in Newberg May 9.

W. C. Woodward, '98, returned home from the University of California May 8.

D. D. Coulson, '03, visited his sister, Mamie and cousin, Eva Frazier at the boarding hall May 9.

Just half of the '07 class got together May 9th and planned for their "stunt" at the Alumni Public.

The Alumni are planning to make things interesting Commencement week in the ball game and Alumni Public.

Paul V. Maris, '07, deputy dairy and food commissioner, has been appointed superintendent of the dairy department at the Oregon State Fair.

Worth Coulson, '05, also his sister, Mrs. Cox, and Miss Myrtle Brower, all of Scotts Mills, visited Mamie Coulson and Eva Frazier May 22 and 23.

Carl Nelson, '04, president of the Alumni Association, gave a very interesting chapel talk May 3. He told of the schools of his native country, Denmark, showing some pictures and articles of dress.

Bernice Woodward, '06, was married to W. A. King May 19. The Alumni guests were: Owen Maris, '03, Paul Maris, '07, D. D. Coulson, '03, Marie Hanson, '06, Cecil Hoskins, '07, W. S. Parker, '99, E. A.
